When it was sent out from Washing tou that the administration had agreed to a compromise on the Sherman silver bill repeal, extending the time for it to go into effect one year instead of on its passage, it surprised everybody who had learned to believe that Grover Cleveland, like Davy Crockett, always made sure he was right before going ahead. It turns out like we should have known all along, that the compromise was the invention of the wishy-washy senators headed by Gorman, who steered the thing through, by making, or at least leaving the impression, that the president had agreed to the compromise. Many senators under the misapprehension signed the paper, who upon being apprised of the real state of affairs, repudiate their act and will now vote for a taken to-day or to-morrow. THE Louisville Commercial says the picture we referred to in our last issue 'is not intended to represent a rural rooster at all. There was also a deeply-concealed purpose to work upon the sympathy of the brethren to such an extent as to provoke an invitation for the poor, cramped creature in the picture to 'run down for a week's shooting' and stretch his benumbed limbs. THE RHODODENDRON.

One of the Most Charming Shrubs for Northern Lawiss.

In England It Is Also Considered One of the Micest Winter Plants for the House-Introctions for Growing It.

Among phonts for sool house decoration and for everyreens out of doors, the rhododendron takes a prominent place. There are numerous species and many varieties, but more that are unnarged. It seems a pity that such a ous to the United States, should be so ecklom seen in home grounds. It is really better known in England than here, and there it forms one of the main features of the undergrowth of lawns and pleasure grounds. The evergreens, it has not been planted extensively except by people of wealth who wish to keep up fine grounds and who have a gardener to care for them. Because of the evergreen leaves of a glaccous hue, if for nothing more, the rhododendron should find him if he don't cull?-Once a Week. a place on every lawn, for the sake of variety. Add to this its low growth aml beautiful flowers, and we have a plant with few rivals. Still, amateurs with but a limited purse cannot afford many plants, especially of the named and grafted sorts, but nurserymen are offering unnamed seedlings at a moderate price, and they are sure to give ; satisfaction when planted singly or in groups. Upon the lawn rhododendross should have a situation protected from the cold sweeping winds of winter. They like a light loam, manured annually with peat and leaf mold. The subsoil should be retentive. for they do not thrive well if kept dry? For greenhouse culture they must be kept in as small pots as possible and the not space restricted. Given good, rich soil and good drainage. They are strictly a cool house plant, and will not do well in a warm atmosphere. A house as near forty degrees as possible suits them best, although they will withstand sixty degrees in the duytime if the temperature does not fall too low at night. They should be left indoors the first two years, and may then be just outside during the summer ofter that. The growing season is from April to Anne, when they should have plenty of water. The plants should be removed to a rood pit or house on the upprouch of cold weather, which should be kept just above the freezing point. For early flowering, the plants should be brought into moderate heat from Hecember ouward, but must not be kept Rhododendrous are propagated in vorbus ways. As mentioned, many pre raised from seed. The seed pods should be allowed to uniture, but unust be picked before bursting and placed in a warm place in the house. As soon CNESAPEAKE & OHIO us the pods burst the seeds unst be puthered and sown thinly. Mis with gathered and sown thinly. Mix with twenty parts of line sand and seav in pans illied with equal parts of linelysifted lowin and decayed pest. Cover very thinly with a sifting of this umi a little sand und water with a line hose. The seedlings should be pricked out into smuli pois when three or four leaves have formed, kept in the greenhouse a few weeks and then moved out into pits. The seeds will keep coming up for several months. Cuttings of side shoots are often inken, and inarching aml tapering are somethnes practiced. Stocks for grafting are raised from seed or cuttings and grafted in the spring when one year ohl. 'The saddle graft side graft ami bud give good results. The cuttings should be of hilf-ripe wood and should be stuck into compost in a close frame with moderate bottom heat. Hat little prunning is required, and when it is necessary it should be done at a time when the part removed can be used for cuttings.

How to Make an Artistic Garment for a Girl.

The Materials Used by the Inventor of This Charming Design Was a Worn. Out Dress of Considerable Antiquity.

Economy does not necessarily sacrifice daintiness and beauty to usefulness. Some of the prettiest dresses imaginable are "made over" dresses. and the number of bewitching little garments our grown-up clothes are capable of being turned into for the tiny folks is legion. The little clock illustrated here is one of the "made-overs," and I am quite sure no prettier need be asked for to put a little four-year-old maiden into. It is very simple, but I was converted to the doctrine of simplicity for children long ago. The materials for the little clock were-well, a worn-out dress belonging to a former generation! To be sure, the worn-outness was not universal-only the sleeves really. So the little coat has all the wear of new goods in it. The body is dark blue plaided off with lines of gold and red, the sleaves of plain blue to match the ground-work of the plaid, and the cuffs and yoke of blue velvet. Blue ribbons tie under a little round chin. However, the material is immaterial! Colors and goods may vary to suit a body's taste-and worn-out dresset

ARTISTIC LITTLE CLOAK.

Or goods fresh from the counter may be treated acceptably in just this fashion.

The pattern in this case was adapted -turned "wrong side foremost"-from round-yoke French Mother Hubbard. The little yoke may be either round or square—the little filustration shows a happy medium. The cloak is plaited instead of gathered to the yoke, with only a narrow heading, and the plaits are side-plaits running each way from a broad double box-plait in the center of the back and from the opening in front. The sleeves are very full and plaited into the arm-size rather than gathered, and plaited, too, into the velvet cuffs. Two long strips of material (lined heavily with "stiff ning") are plaited into a stiff little frill that stands upright on either shoulder. These epanlets are graduated in width, from quite broad in the center to very narrow where they merge into the armsize altogother on either side. Long ribbons tie at the throat, and a hook and hop fasten the yoke at its lower eml. And there you have the little cont complete! Could it be simpler or more childish? In my own eyes it is very dainty and charming.-Annie Hamilton Donnell, in Country Gentleman.

Dint on a wall paper can be most readily removed by rubbing over it lightly a lump of dough made of the coarsest flour, and but little stiffer than for a pudding. Stale bread is often used for this purpose, but it is not so valuable as the dough, as the latter leaves no erumbs.

To Wash the Hair.

For washing the hair, particularly such as is inclined to be oily, nothing la better than the common hard soan of the kitchen. A woman who has used it frequently he reelf and seen its benefits tested in other cases prescribes it with strong fuith. "Make a atrong suds," she says, "rub it quickly on the hair and wash it off again atonce. After that any seemed soap or wash may be used in the way of an ordinary shampoo." An English maid, who is famed for the care of her mistress' hair, may be taken in further testimony of the same article, as the only wash she uses is sospands thickened with a teaspoonful of glycerine and the white of an edg. Undowbtedly, women waste money in expensive hair beautifiers and preservers. Simple means right to one's hand, are just up effective. The pulp of a lemon, for instance, rubbed on the roots of the hair will stop ordinary cases of falling out,

In its columns is a brief and rather unsatisfactory reference to an affair which had excited large interest in that part of Mississippi. I was not a witness of it: and the description afterward given to me by one of the actors in it was so much more in detail than the newspaper account that 1 prefer cipal has accepted your challenge beto adopt the former in setting this landmark at the outset of the story.

If you follow the left bank of the burg bluffs sink to the ordinary level of the river banks, you will come out upon a beautiful grassy glade overlooking the water. Some small clms and cottonwoods made a pleasant shade bordering the road; n wide strip of land, possibly thirty rods across, lay between the highway and the river bank.

So early upon the morning of the 3d of that April that the sun had not jet shown his rim above the trees, three horsemen came at a brisk trot down the read, stopped at this grove, dismounted, and tied their horses.

"The other people are not here yet," one of the men observed. "There's time enough. Ali! there they are."

Three more horsemen approached from the opposite direction. They also halted here, and fastened their horses.

All of the six were dressed in white duck suits, for the weather of that spring had come on hot. Two of them fore. carried each one a case of mahogany wood, and these two, after salnting each other, came together in earnest conversation. Two of the others also approached and shook hands, and the prefix "doctor" was exchanged between them.

"A disagreeable lusiness," one observed. "Indeed it Is. I hope we shall neither of us be needed." "I hope so-but fear it will be otherwise. They say both are good shots.

You brought your instruments?" "Yes; I carry them in a large pocket in my saddle-flap."

"All right; my durky is on the way of hearing. But as my account of the whole affair came from one of them, their conversation may be stated here. "Has this thing really got to go on?" "I suppose so-unless your man will withdraw his challenge." "lle enn't do that. To do it would be to confess that he never had any grounds for it." 'And, do you know, Mr. Castex says the challenge. But Bostock put the emphasize the scene. affront on blin in such a public manner, and in his own house, too, that he swears he'll fight, unless the challenge is absolutely withdrawn, without explanation."

"Well, it's an absurd thing! Duels I have been concerned in, have fought by him. He never stirred. A small three or four myself, but never before was lengaged in one where nobody but the principals knew what the provocation was; and one of them insists that there was none. It seems like hoy's ply."

"Look nty: roan; heacts as though he were too angry this minute to cont: in hlmself."

The principals to this meeting had bowed in the most distant manner upon reaching the ground. Then Mr. Castex sat down, propped his back against a tree, lit a eigar, and smoked it as lazily as though his spirits were perfectly inruffled by the prospect of the coming encounter. Mr. Bustock, on the contrary, walked nervously about, switching at the grass with his cane, and occasionally turning upon his nonchalant antagonist a glance that was decidedly savage.

The seconds resumed their consultatlon.

"Is It worth while to try to get an explanation?" "Not in the temper your man is in, I should say: not without a shot. We will stand them up once, and the first exchange may lead to an arrange-

"If it don't put one or both of them beyond the reach of arrangements," muttered the other. "Well, come on."

Messrs. Basnet and Dorion crossed the road; the others followed them. The first rays of the sun glaneed through the trees; the delicions harmony of birds shook the alr; the throbhing of the engines and splash of the paddle-whisels of a hoat ascending the river were painfully distinct.

Mr. Dorlon thrust a small stick into the turf and deliberately measured off ten paces, marking the limit in the same way. "Will you toss for position, Mr. Ilasnet?"

The other tossed up a coin. "Heads!" cried Dorion, and both bent over the place. "You win, Mr. Castex. Please make your chaice." The person addressed walked to one of the sticks; his adversary walked to no will-lut my child, Coralie, will the other. Contrasting them as they thus stood face to face, Bostock appeared tall, broad shouldered and ruddy: Castex slighter in build, sallow

"That is what I say," called out Mr. Castex from where he stood, with a strong French accent.

I was a boy of eleven, rather precocions for my years. I attended the ance of the time among these rocks. 1 went to "meeting" on Sundays In the all elifice on top of a hith kill, on the steeple of which a veering wooden eodfish denoted the direction of the wind, and saved the people from the profanation which a cross in that to the choir, elevated to a fearful height in the rear gallery, as they thundered forth resounding anthems and drawling-voiced minister pray faces of the principals that predicted forty minutes at a stretch, and preach ninety, frequently devoting ninetenths of the whole race to exqui ite and eternal torment. I had a thirst for knowledge that the public school could not supply. A stray copy of the Bostom Daily Journal, coming like an enclainter from the outside world, sometimes stimulated this thirst. I was generally regarded as 'n green boy," "an odd stick," etc.; and I once heard of Beacon Halleck telling my father that a boy with such outlandish notions as Dorr on the to be whipped regularly twice a week. Houbtless I should have been, had the denean been given the ordering of meearlier than he was; but my father, although reared in all the vigor of Paritanism, was by unture kind and tender-hearted, and religious fanaticism could not clamge him. To my own mazzled youthful mind, it often seemed is though a grave mistake had been made in my allotment. I seemed to have been set down in the wrong corner of the world, among a people with whom I had no affinity

He looked at me-n serious, pitying rlance it was -and sat down on a granlte bowlder. He leaned his head on his hand and sighed.

"My loy, I've often thought of this Your poor mather and I have lald awake nights talking about it; but I never thought it had troubled you any. What do you want?"

"To go to the neademy-maybe to college and by and by to get out into the world, try to make a man of myself, like the men I read of, and to see something besides these hills and these people. I'd like to get rich, and come back and build a big house for you and mother over on the like. Yes, I'd like to do anything rather than live here all my life."

He smiled at my youthful enthus lasm; but his look of painful reflection quickly returned.

'Dorr, I had just such dreams myself, when I was young, and I presume that my father before me had them. I wanted un education, and couldn't have it. Here was a brief parley; then the men got cat, hitched the horse, climbed the fence and strode over the upland to-

Perhaps my frame of mind just then inclined me toward a presentiment. Perhaps the reader will say that it is nlways easy to predict after the fact. No matter: the fact remains the same that a sudden and decided conviction was forced upon me that this stranger was to luve a positive influence upon my life, and that his presence here at this time was of itself a promise of great results for me.

He walked rapidly, removing his wide-trimmed palm-leaf hat and wiping his brow with a large red hundkerchief us he came. He was tall, powerful of frame and florid of face; and I observed that there was something about this color, hardiya tan, that lat once attributed to the sun of another latitude than this. Every detail of his person and dress I took in at once; my tention was certainly sharpened by the presentiment I have mentioned. I judged him to be ut least lifty years old, though his face was plump and unwrinkled. His features were bold and handsome; there was a twinkle to his eye and an ever-recurring smile upon his face that made him seem the most charming of men. Short carls of chestnut hair ran all over bis head. His dress was rich in material and fashionable in cut: diamonds were in his shirt-front, and an immense solitaire sparkled on one of his little the

The best hotel in the city and the only one with

TO All Tax-Payers.

The 18/3 Lasco are now past due and will be collected in the Sheriff's office at the court house and by special appointments as prescribed by the new revenue law. Hepity Sheriff 10, P. New-land will be in Crab. Orchard every Saturday. I for my deputy will be in my office at all times and at Hustonville, Waynesburg and other points as often as advertised by Sheriff's buck-keeping has rendered it impossible for in stocanical settled notices. The new form of Sheriff's buck-keeping has rendered it impossible for in stocanical settled notices will be collected strictly in conformance to the new revenue law. Every tas-payer whose tas remains unjoined after November 1st will find its property or land; advertised without lirither notice. The financial crists which its exists makes it absolutely necessary that I collect every dollar of the 19 tases, as I can not expect that help from the Barks which has hereiofore caused me to be lessent with the tax payers. Please profit by this and settle at once. Respectable,
